

The end of climate change doom: 2

The Connollys show that even in the worst scenario any possible rise in temperature is very small. In scientific terms, if the greenhouse gas is not an 'ideal gas' and if the atmosphere is not in thermodynamic equilibrium, then there is some warming. But this warming is very small; it is about 1 Celsius degree for every doubling of CO₂ concentration in the atmosphere (referent sensitivity). Yet man has only added 40% of CO₂ since 1850.

There is no 'direct warming' by CO₂. The 'feedback response' is also minimal. The science of this is very complicated involving the science of gases and molar density but the net result is that Greenhouse gases do not cause global warming because the atmosphere is in thermodynamic equilibrium, based on Einstein's paper of 1919. Their 'statistical confidence' result is almost perfect (this is unusual) and their results are replicable.

The various aspects of evidence discovered by the Connollys have been published in peer reviewed scientific journals since 2015. They have been well received by top scientists in academia (Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Cambridge) and they have lectured to large audiences of scientists. They have also worked in teams with other scientists and published papers with them. [The Connollys are not funded by any group or vested interest; they are self-funded.] However, the media has continually ignored them and their opportunities to speak at universities have been shut down under protest.

The findings of the Connollys are entirely in agreement with a number of other discoveries, which include: deep-sea ocean core samples; ice core samples and the recent ancient sediment samples discovered by scientists in an obscure lake in China. These all prove that man has no effect on global climate.

The publications of IPCC computer models predicted massive rises of temperature in recent years. However, the actual measurements of real world temperatures are much cooler than that which was predicted by the UN, showing that the fundamentals of the UN's agenda is wrong when compared to empirical data.

The net result of the Connolly's research, corresponding to that evidenced by core samples and the recent Chinese reports, is that Greenhouse gases are not warming the planet.

The whole climate change agenda is based upon a lie. CO₂ is vital to the production of plants, and therefore oxygen, and is not our enemy.

Further information:

- Paul Fahy, The fabrications behind climate change.
- Paul Fahy, Synopsis against global warming.
- Paul Fahy, Climate change, eugenics, oil and tyranny.
- YouTube, orlared: 'Christopher Monckton: New Irish study shows greenhouse gas effect cannot cause global warming', 25 August 2019.
- YouTube, orlared: 'The Irish scientists who are debunking climate change alarmist', 10 September 2019.
- YouTube, Tony Heller, 'Is the Global temperature record credible', 5 November 2018.